EXPLANATORY NOTE

Many Filipino families complain that the current estate tax rates are distressingly high. In fact, these rates are comparably higher than in other nations. A worldwide survey of forty-eight (48) nations shows that an overwhelming majority impose lower estate tax rates. Moreover, the average top estate tax rate is 10%, much lower than the Philippines' 20%. Among neighboring nations in Asia and Oceania, only Japan and South Korea impose higher estate tax rates.

The same is true for donor's tax rates: majority of the nations impose lower rates. The average top donor's tax rate is 7% for donations to relatives, less than half of the Philippines' 15%. In Asia and Oceania, only Japan and South Korea impose higher donor's tax rates.

One may argue that the enormity of transfer tax rates satisfies the very purpose of transfer taxation: the redistribution of wealth from the rich to the poor. However, studies have shown that higher tax rates encourage evasion. There is no statistical record showing the number of transfer tax evasions in the Philippines because of difficulty of detection but a number of indicators show that these concealed acts are prevalent, such as transfer tax effort and slow annual increases in transfer tax collections. The prevalence of these acts defeats the purposes of transfer taxation. For this reason, this bill proposes lowering the transfer tax rates and increasing the exemptions and the limits to certain deductions.

Another weakness we see in the provisions of the National Internal Revenue Code on Transfer Taxes is their complexity. Studies have shown that increased complexity in tax statutes, like higher tax rates, also results in decreased compliance. Additionally, it makes tax enforcement more difficult and less effective. Hence, this bill addresses this problem by giving the taxpayer-estates the opportunity to choose optional standard deductions, in lieu of the itemized deductions, to spare them from the stressful situation of complying with all the requirements incidental to the filing of tax returns.

Another factor resulting in decreased compliance is the public's perception that the tax system is unfair. Although this bill does not propose changes to completely reverse this perception, it seeks to introduce indexation clause, in which the exemptions and deduction limits are to be indexed in accordance with the movement of Consumer Price Index (CPI). This clause lessens the degree of unfairness caused by the non-movement of exemptions and deduction limits despite the changes in prices of properties. Moreover, it also lessens the possibility of piecemeal legislation to adjust the exemptions and deduction limits in the future to adapt to the demands of the public.

In sum, this bill seeks to increase tax compliance by lowering the transfer tax rates, increasing the exemptions and the limits to certain deductions, giving the estates-taxpayers optional standard deductions, in lieu of the itemized deductions, and introducing the indexation clause.

In view of the foregoing considerations, approval of this bill is requested.
