AN ACT
PROVIDING FOR THE PROMOTION OF FILM AND TELEVISION TOURISM, CREATING THE FILM PHILIPPINES OFFICE, PROVIDING FUNDS THEREFOR AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Being selected as a film location for an international blockbuster film brings more than just pride to the Philippines. For one thing, it is widely recognized as an effective promotional tool for tourism, the impact of which has been significantly evident in other countries. In New Zealand, tourist arrivals instantly doubled since the debut of The Lord of the Rings Trilogy in 2001 (Forbes, 2012). Visitors of Wallace Monument in Scotland increased from 30,000 to 200,000 following the release of Braveheart (theguardian.com, 2012). Meanwhile, the release of Chinese film Lost in Thailand made China the largest source of overseas tourists in Thailand. In Cambodia, Tomb Raider has attracted tourists greater than what Angkor Wat can actually accommodate. Meanwhile, from 2012-2015, Game of Thrones, a hit American series, influenced the tourism in Dubrovnik, Croatia which received 245,000 more arrivals from tourists, more than 1.5 million overnight stays, and almost 126 million euros in revenue (TKalec, Zilic, Recher, 2017).

The Philippines is in no way behind these countries in terms of beauty and distinctiveness. We have abundant breathtaking scenery and magnificent landscapes infused with rich culture, making our country a viable filming location. In fact, there have been several foreign films and television series that showcase the beauty of our country. As early as 1979, our country was chosen as a film location for the film Apocalypse Now. Survivor: Russia, which was shot in Caramoan greatly contributed to the development of Caramoan’s tourism. From having only one hotel with three rooms in 2006, the island now has 23 hotels with a combined total of 250 rooms for tourists and explorers who came to know of the island through Survivor: Russia. Local films and soap operas are also significant tourism contributors following the success of That Thing Called Tadhana and Forevermore, drawing thousands of tourists in Sagada and La Trinidad, Benguet, respectively.

Despite these projects, we have yet to tap the full potential of film and television tourism because of a lack in the State’s investment in this program. Despite our natural advantage in having diverse beautiful locations, foreign film productions prefer to shoot in other countries because they offer better incentives such as larger cash rebates and competitive tax incentives. For example, the famous action-spy thriller Mission Impossible took an interest in filming in the Philippines in 2019, which would have potentially spent around PHP 2 Billion in the country. Unfortunately, we lost the project to Thailand which had virtually an uncapped film incentives program, whereas our current incentives are capped at PHP 10 Million per production.

This bill, hence, seeks to develop and promote film and television tourism and enhance our current film incentives programs. This can be done through the institutionalizing and strengthening the Film Philippines Office under the FDCP. Aside from promoting the Philippines as a prime filming location, it also seeks to develop enabling policies that would ease the procedure of procuring requirements and permits.

This measure does not, however, end at developing film tourism as an economic tool. This gives equal importance to the impact of tourism to immediate communities. Unplanned tourism may result to environmental degradation and disruption to the lives of local people and this bill seeks to prevent that through a sustainable film tourism program.

In view of the foregoing, the approval of this proposed measure is earnestly sought.
